black and white without dis terrified Julie should certainly turbance of distortion!

As it is, there is the strange and unearthly beauty to the strange and unearthy tale of a woman who has married a gifted and jealously-insane piwho has already murdered his first wife before the film opens.

Her fright mounts when he tries to put the fear of radlove in her heart during a crazy automobile drive at break-neck What beauty would have speed along coastal curves. been here had the film been in She tells her suspicions to her - and then, fitting the best friend, and when her husmood, shading off gradually un-band admits his crime, the film til the final reel, shot in a plane goes into a long and as tense in flight could have gone to a "chase" as you will find on the screen, winding up on a plane which she must bring in after her husband scares the living daylights out of herand out of you, too.

This is breathless melodrama director Andrew Stone, piloting his own story, has done a fine job of handling his players throughout . . . the studied premiere on the evening of Nov. Sunday, Mink said. maniac-husband, the natural way both the frightened Miss Day and the concerned Barry Sullivan, as her protector, step on each other's lines as they advance the plot, and, outstand-ing, the fine editing on planeboard during the final reel which cuts from plane to radar station and builds suspense and excitement almost to the breaking point.

The early reels have a few moments of, shall I say, drama-tic license when Jourdan is a little too hot on the trail of his fleeing and frightened wife, but that certainly does build sus-pense alert and entertain the spectator. The mood-lighting, the fast cutting and the acting are among the film's other entertainment-virtues.
